I am a career public servant, specialising in strategy and international policy, Government relations, public messaging, and program management. I have deployed on military operations advising Australia's strategic priorities and am currently posted as a strategic advisor to Papua New Guinea's Department of Defence. I hold a Bachelor of Security Analysis (Asia-Pacific) and a Master of Military and Defence Studies from the Australian National University. I successfully completed the Chinese proficiency test, HSK 4, while studying at the People's Liberation Army Foreign Language University in China.

Having started tracing my family history as a teenager as a way of spending time with my grandparents, I am currently completing the Society's Certificate of Genealogical Studies.
